

Caring for a Baby is to Touch the Future
Conference on the Young Years 2019
Rhodanne M. Schiller MS Ed

Child-adult relationships that are responsive and attentive, build a strong foundation in a child's brain for all learning and future development.
Center on the Developing Child Harvard University

Adult-child relationships are foundational

Adult conversation with the infant is essential for developing functional language

Serve and Return brings together shared experiences with adults that prepare the child for later learning environments

Preparing carefully for a variety of transitions develops the child's sense of security
